

"Thank you," he says, punching the you. "I respect you. I respect what you do."

Perhaps I ease his conscience a bit. At least he knows there is a spiritual advisor, a compassionate, forgiving presence there with the person condemned to death under the law, a law which, on the other side of the red telephone, however reluctantly, he allows to be carried out.

#